

What's Up at Sha'ar Zahav

Fall Scholar-in-Residence: Rabbi J.B. Sacks

SHABBAT, NOVEMBER 7-8, 2008. We are very fortunate to welcome Rabbi Sacks as our Jeffrey A. Miller Scholar-in-Residence for Fall 2008. Please join us for a unique opportunity to learn from a gay Jewish pioneer. He will be teaching us at Friday evening Shabbat services (8:15 p.m.) and morning services (10:15 a.m.), and we will have further opportunities to learn with him at Shabbat lunch and a Havdalah program Saturday evening.

Kristallnacht

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 6:30 PM. Rabbi Angel and participants from this past spring's Sha'ar Zahav trip to Eastern Europe will lead a commemorative service marking Kristallnacht, or The Night of Broken Glass, where in Germany in 1938, 92 Jews were murdered and 30,000 were arrested and deported to concentration camps while 200 synagogues and tens of thousands of Jewish businesses were destroyed.

Visiting Professor and Rabbi Samuel Joseph

FRIDAY NIGHT SHABBAT SERVICES
NOVEMBER 14, 2008, 7:30 P.M. Join us for a special Kabbalat Shabbat

We Can Lose Without Becoming Lost

RABBI CAMILLE SHIRA ANGEL

It was like the breaking of the glass at the end of the Jewish wedding, which reminds us that despite our great love and joy, the world outside our chuppah is still broken and we need to mend it.

My elation began to deflate too soon on election night as news on Proposition 8 arrived. I felt angry, betrayed, vulnerable and suspicious. I felt sad and disappointed, my optimism hijacked by the threatening prejudice and homophobia in this state I call home.

Since the Supreme Court's ruling, we have labored tirelessly to protect our rights. Many of us set our skepticism aside and got legally married, again. Many of us attended weddings; some of us officiated at these civil wedding; and a tremendous number of us campaigned—phone-banking, going door to door, contributing tzedakah, and encouraging others to give generously of their time and money. Let no one think it was in vain. Hearts and minds were changed. Real and lasting relationships and allies were made. Our Sha'ar Zahav community effort and leadership, both as individuals and as a collective gave us so many reasons to feel proud.

I want to share one example from many in our work with the San Francisco Organizing Project, where we have real opportunities to build bridges across lines of faith and race and class. At the October SFOP Clergy Lunch, I spoke personally about what Prop 8 means to me and my family and the members of my community. Sitting at the table with Catholics, Baptists, Methodists and others, I could sense the uneasiness grow as I asked folks to fight against the injustice of Prop 8, regardless of how they might feel about religious same-sex marriages.

One minister said that, although he couldn't work with us, he wasn't going to work against us. Another priest said he was confused because he is called to "Love Thy Neighbor As Thyself" and he knows we are his neighbors and his family and his parish members. Later, I received a phone call from this courageous Catholic wanting me to know he had reflected and prayed on the matter and had decided he would not follow the direction of the Archdiocese; he would not speak about or promote Prop. 8. We need to deepen our relationship with these churches in coming years.

The Art of Welcoming

ON ROSH HASHANAH,

I spoke about three of the four Torah passages inscribed on our stained glass windows.

Let me tell you now about the fourth. The verses situate us in the story of Abraham and Sarah welcoming guests into their desert tent. The portion, (which is actually read this year in November) describes Abraham expressing an eagerness to greet and warmly receive these unexpected visitors. Though he himself is recuperating, he jumps up and proactively conveys his desire to afford them a respite from the heat.

Our ancestors' example of radical hospitality comes to be known as the mitzvah of hacnassat orchim. Welcoming guests, inviting strangers into our homes is considered among the most important spiritual imperatives in Judaism. The Talmud teaches a remarkable lesson: "Hacnassat orchim, welcoming strangers, is a greater mitzvah than welcoming the Shechinah, God's presence" [Shabbat 127a].

Jo Ellen Kaiser's inspiring words of Torah on Yom Kippur began with noticing the Hebrew letters Kuf Kuf written on the outside of our building. An abbreviation for Kehillah Kedusha, "Holy Congregation," these words are meant to advertise our mission to the outside world as well as to remind those of us who've found entry—we are to be an open, welcoming tent where you can find nourishment and sustenance in relationship to others.

Our Va'ad has been reading a wonderful book by Dr. Ron Wolfson, The Spirituality of Welcome: How to Transform Your Congregation into a Sacred Community. Together we are studying and discussing ways in which we can make our communal home of Sha'ar Zahav more inviting to those who are still on the outside.

In the book we are reminded that people consider joining congregations for many reasons. The initial motivation for joining is because the congregation provides something: religious education, prayer services, a community of friends, a rabbi when needed.

Interestingly, most of the reasons for re-maining at a synagogue are less tangible and pertain to the heart and soul—a sense of belonging and a sense of meaning. So it is that we need to find ways for new and disengaged congregants to acquire that sense of belonging and meaning. Our shared obligation as a kehillah kedusha is to be aware and conscious of such individuals and families so that they do not remain peripheral and unconnected.

Our mission is to be a synagogue of relationships. My dream for our kehillah kedusha is that it is a place where we find people with whom we want to associate, people we admire, people we want to emulate, people we want to learn from and with, and people who are radically different from us. When we make connections with these people, they influence us in a variety of ways—impacting our values, our behaviors, and even our beliefs.

Let me conclude by highlighting one very opportunity that we've created with the spirit of welcoming people from other religious backgrounds into our home.

Our Multifaith Thanksgiving Service, this year held on Tuesday, November 22 at 7pm., has become an annual highlight. More than a dozen faith communities join us in celebrating and give thanks for our bounty and in collecting food and money to feed the hungry. We need each other more than ever this year. I hope you will make every effort to be there.

May we continue to grow in relationship to one another and in so doing fulfill our mission to be a kehillah kedusha.

"We, as a society, are at risk of losing the art of hospitality. We don't welcome strangers anymore—we are afraid of them. We don't greet people on the street—we avoid them. We don't even answer our phones without first checking caller ID to see it is someone we know or want to talk with."

—Dr. Ron Wolfson

●Covenants: Not Just for Sinai

WHAT DOES IT mean to be a leader at Sha'ar Zahav? And what does it mean to be a member? Rabbi Angel has often used the word "covenant" to characterize the relationship she has with our shul. The term describes a reciprocal relationship which works in many ways like a "contract"—but there's a spiritual intentionality present in a covenant which is not generally present in a contract.

Rabbi Angel's formal employment contract uses the word covenant to capture the nature of our mutual agreement to undertake "the obligation to work together in the service of God, the Jewish people, and the community of Sha'ar Zahav." I think that definition makes sense for all of us.

This summer I introduced a "Covenant for Leadership" to members of the Va'ad, with an intention that after discussion, we will each formally enter into such a covenant. In the current draft, the introduction states: "Serving on the Va'ad is an honor ... and a responsibility which requires considerable commitment: Commitment on the part of each Va'ad member to accept ownership of the well-being of the congregation; and commitment on the part of the President, officers, clergy and staff to honor the Va'ad's role." The language of this covenant is still under development. I will be happy to share the resulting document after we finalize it.

Does a "Covenant of Membership" exist at Sha'ar Zahav? Many of us may feel one exists in our synagogue/member relationship, but to the best of my knowledge, such a covenant has never been explicitly discussed or formalized.

To become a member of Congregation Sha'ar Zahav, each person is asked to complete an application indicating some level of intentionality. In accepting your application, the synagogue is making a commitment each of you. The synagogue provides regular religious services each week; holiday observances; adult and children's education; and life cycle ceremonies. Sha'ar Zahav also provides frameworks for personal service in meaningful social action and Bikkur Cholim projects. Finally, Sha'ar Zahav offers us some more intangible benefits: a community in which to celebrate and one to support you in times of need; a community for friendship ... and love; an anchor in an uncertain world.

And what obligations does each member have in this covenant? I would argue that each member should commit to engage in and support our community. That includes respectfully sharing your concerns and being open to engaging with others around issues that trouble you. Members who are engaged in and support our shul will never just throw up their hands and walk away.

Evaluating the value of our membership should not just be about assessing: "Are my needs being met?" Joining a synagogue is not like buying tickets to a performance. Maybe it's like President Kennedy's pivotal question: "Ask not what your shul can do for you, but ask what you can do for your shul."

So what can we do for Sha'ar Zahav? Certainly financial support is important: Dues, our annual Rainbow Fund campaign, our annual High Holiday appeal, honoring someone with a donation, and, for those who are able, participating in our Chai Campaign for major enhancements to our physical and programmatic offerings. Yet "Supporting" is not just a financial effort. We also should commit to giving of our time and energy to enrich the programs and services we offer: teaching a class, helping with the newsletter, volunteering to help create a spectacular Chanukah party this December.

"Engaging in" community means not being passive toward Sha'ar Zahav. When we join, we should expect to make connections, but only through our own efforts to be present and engaged so that those connections might emerge. Our school has recently started a trial program called Circle of Commitment, whereby in addition to paying tuition, parents are expected to commit to some service to the synagogue or to the school. Rebecca Weiner explains that the aim is to increase each parent's spiritual kavanah with a promise that the more they get involved, the more they will get out of their connection to Sha'ar Zahav and to Beit Sefer Phyllis Mintzer.

What do you think? I hope to schedule a more formal way for us to address this topic in the future, but in the meantime, please let me know your thoughts on what components might be included in a Covenant of Membership: president@shaarzahav.org. Thank you. May we—members, clergy, staff, leadership—all find the will and the words to enter into a holy covenant with Sha'ar Zahav.

CLASSES:

Reform Judaism: History, Theology and Sociology Taught by Rabbi Camille Shira Angel

3 TUESDAYS: OCTOBER 28TH, NOVEMBER 11TH, NOVEMBER 18TH, 2008 7:00-9:00 P.M.

These sessions will provide students with a background in the growth and development of the Reform movement from its roots in Europe to its contemporary manifestations throughout the world. By discussing the major issues that confront the movement in both the United States and abroad (especially in Israel), the students will gain a fuller appreciation of the heritage, history, theology and state of Reform Judaism.

Rabbi J.B. Sacks is our scholar in residence this Fall. Rabbi Sacks was ordained at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, and is one of few openly gay rabbis in the Conservative movement. He currently serves on the faculty of the Academy for the Jewish Religion (AJR) in Los Angeles, an alternative seminary that embraces all four branches of Judaism. Rabbi Sacks has also taught at the University of Judaism and Hebrew Union College as a Visiting Professor, usually in Bible.

Rabbi Sacks descends from 17 generations of rabbis on his mother's side. He received his A.B. degree in Spanish in 1978, his B.Lit. in Jewish Studies from the University of Judaism in 1982, and has been honored with awards in Talmudic studies. He recently completed his coursework toward his Ph.D. in Hebrew Bible at Claremont Graduate University.

As a rabbi, Rabbi Sacks has long worked with issues of inclusion within the Conservative Movement, and on issues of poverty and social justice. He also has worked in areas of liturgical change. He has been active within the Jewish community on HIV/AIDS, and founded the Interfaith Network of New Jersey, the oldest interfaith organization involved in supporting people with AIDS as well as their families and friends. He helped to establish the annual World Aids Day observance at the Jewish Museum in New York City, and has also worked with support groups for rabbis living with HIV.

Rabbi Sacks is active in Jews for Marriage Equality, currently helping to get his rabbinic colleagues to join in support of marriage equality and to help defeat Proposition 8 on this November's ballot.

Rabbi Sacks lives with his life partner, Steven Karash and their son Evan in Los Angeles.

CHANUKAH 2008

Latkes and Vodkas and More

Join Sha'ar Zahav and our community for an adult Chanukah party on Thursday, December 18, from 6:30 to 10:00 pm at the LGBT Center, Terrace Room.

The admission is $5-$18 on a sliding scale. There will be schmoozing and dancing, food and drink (both alcoholic and non-alcoholic), and a burlesque show. Leaders in our community will be honored in a candle lighting ceremony. Look for a silent auction with on-line bidding coming soon.

Trans in the Talmud? Transgender and Intersex People in Traditional Jewish Texts Taught by Rabbinical Intern Reuben Zellman

3 MONDAYS: NOVEMBER 3RD, 10TH AND 17TH, 2008, 7:00-9:00 P.M. In today's world, transgender and intersex experiences are often hidden or marginalized. But Jewish texts since 200 C.E. are full of trans and intersex people, and the perspectives of our ancestors about sex and gender can often be surprising. Today, many of these extraordinary writings are again coming into the light, and queer Jews around the world are bringing our fresh voices to a 2,000-year-old conversation. All are welcome to join us to study texts from the Mishna, Talmud, and Midrash, as well as medieval law and poetry, all through a gender-queer lens.

Intermediate to Advanced Service-Leading Techniques

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5TH 6:45-8:45 P.M. An opportunity for seasoned service-leaders to hone your craft. We will discuss and play with different ways of interpreting the prayers, deepening our kavanah, soaring our ruach, and being a shaliach tzibur, a prayer messenger of the community.

Rabbi's Shabbat Morning Class

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 10:00 - 11:30 AM Join Rabbi Angel to study and discuss critical and current topics in the Jewish and LGBTQ communities. All are welcome.

Choosing Judaism: A Discussion Group

Facilitated by Rose Katz and Andrew Ramer
6 TUESDAYS, 7:00-9:00 P.M.: NOVEMBER 18, DECEMBER 16, 2008; JANUARY 13, FEBRUARY 10, MARCH 10, APRIL 14, 2009. This class will explore issues that arise for people who are considering, or are in the process of, converting to Judaism. Topics will include questions of identity, community, and family. People who have recently completed the conversion process but would like to connect with a group to discuss these issues are also welcome. This class is not an introduction to Judaism, but rather a place to ask questions and discuss issues with others who are also on this journey. Please note: In order to create a comfortable group environment, this class will not be open to new participants after the second session. Participants must have met at least once with Rabbi Angel prior to enrolling in this class. Please contact the CSZ office with any questions.

Service-leading for Beginners at CSZ

Taught by Cantor Sharon Bernstein
2 WEDNESDAYS: DECEMBER 3RD AND 17TH, 2008 6:45-8:45 P.M. If you've ever thought about leading services at Sha'ar Zahav, join Cantor Bernstein for this class! All Sha'ar Zahav members are welcome to lead Shabbat and holiday services in our community. No experience necessary. Brand new leaders and also those who have recently started leading are invited to come and learn about the prayers, melodies, and minhagim (customs) of Sha'ar Zahav.

Let's Learn to Immerse: A Visit to the Mikveh (the ritual bath)

SUNDAY DECEMBER 7TH, 9:30 - 11:30 A.M.
AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MIKVEH: 3355 SACRAMENTO STREET (BETWEEN PRESIDIO AND WALNUT) Have you ever wondered what the mikveh is all about? It's time to get educated on the wonders of immersing in the mikveh. Join our Rabbinic Intern, Reuben Zellman, and the SF Mikveh's Betsy Eckstein for an educational tour. We have allowed enough time to give the participants an opportunity to immerse if you choose to. If you want to continue talking, after our tour and optional dunking, we'll grab some lunch nearby and have further discussion.

Space is limited. Please RSVP to reuben@shaarzahav.org, or (415) 861-6932 ext 306, or contact him with any questions.

On the Ark

AS I SIT down to right this, we are smack dab in the middle of the days of awe and four weeks away from the election. It seems in many ways that we are poised on several precipices where the world could spin out in new and revolutionary outcomes or in regressive and painful directions. In all my years of working with children, I have found that they are not immune to the larger issues in the world and they too sense when the world is taking a new spin on its axis.

So what do we do as a community to celebrate or heal or regenerate in the midst of so much change? This summer I accomplished the highly satisfying and yet daunting task of organizing the BSPM bookshelf. It was educational in several ways. For instance, I now know that I have the entire Sammy Spider series and don't have to keep ordering them each year. I also was able to deduce what stories and topics really had meaning for this community based on how many books we had on a certain subject. I was drawn to the Noah story because I discovered we have at least fifteen books on the subject.

I have pondered why the story of Noah has so much meaning for this community and for the Jewish community as a whole. Perhaps it is the legacy of both LGBT history and Jewish history that resonates with the notion of a world completely changed or the great escape or the idea of each individual's importance in the completion of Tikkun Olam. And of course there is always that rainbow.....!!

In the past couple of months, I have thought of our BSPM community as an ark of sorts, a place of refuge, a safe haven for a students and families. Instead of elephants two by two, we are families of all shapes, colors and sizes that come on board here to ride out the seas of possibility and change. It is my hope that the students at BSPM will always associate their Jewish identity with a sense of belonging and the importance of community. It is my hope that they will stay active in community and see the belonging to a Jewish community as a crucial part of their adult lives.

I also want them to understand that no community is perfect. It seems certain to me that the animals on the ark must have had some conflict. Perhaps the elephants really thought the ark was much more user friendly for the lions. Perhaps the monkeys were waxing nostalgic for how the ark smelled on the first couple of days on the journey and not on the 40th. Perhaps they squeaked and squawked and mooed and nayed through a lot of discord and shaking of paws in the air, but they did it together with a common goal and with an understood outcome.

This idea of commitment is one of the main values that I want our students to take away from their Jewish education. I want them to feel that they can walk into any shul and if they don't feel comfortable then to make it so. I want them to understand that perhaps they will not feel comfortable every moment in community but that is no reason to abandon ship, if you will. I want them to realize their own relationships with Judaism and with their notion of G-d but also always hold the importance of minyan, of institution of infrastructure of paying their dues. And in these communities, I hope they will always have their voices, wonderful learning and excellent nosh.

We don't know now where the high seas will take us, but as we embark on 5769 and anticipate other waves of change, I am honored to be on board with all of you. We will ride it out together and we will fall back on each other and this amazing community we have built.

B'Shalom,
Rebecca

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 6:00-9:00 PM.

We invite your entire family and your friends (non-members warmly welcomed) to CSZ's East Bay Chavurah. Our evening begins with a vegetarian/vegan potluck as we share blessings and check in, while singing, eating, and enjoying each other's company. At around 7:30, adults (and teens) are invited to continue our Shabbat experience with some meaningful text-based Jewish dialogue. We invite parents of young children to take advantage of our childcare during this time. To RSVP or host a future event, please contact Richard Weiner, 510.531.7660, or Sue Bojdak, 510.530.9955.

ward to visiting Israel next year with his 8th grade class. Sam loves to read science fiction, enjoys a good comedy (especially Adam Sandler) and plays the flute. Prior to middle school, Sam attended Rooftop Alternative School.

Athletic and an avid sports fan, Sam runs cross-country and plays soccer and baseball. He once stole home to win an all star baseball game. Said Sam's Bar Mitzvah mentor, Ron Lezell, "Our sessions usually begin with catching up on the travails of the San Francisco Giants and my challenge to respond to Sam's insightful questions related to his Torah and Haftara portions."

Sam says that preparing for his Bar Mitzvah has helped him to "get" religion and "makes me feel more Jewish." Following his Bar Mitzvah, Sam hopes to more fully observe Shabbat including having Shabbat dinners.

Sam is the great-grandson of Samuel Isenberg.

Lisa Windesheim-Zigas

will be called to read torah at her Bat Mitzvah on Dec 6, 2008. Lisa is a 7th grade Spanish immersion student at

James Lick Middle School in San Francisco, and she has been attending Beit Seifer since Kindergarten. As a mixed-race child, adopted into a Jewish home, the diversity at CSZ has supported Lisa's exploration of her social as well as her spiritual identity. Thanks to all of Lisa's teachers at CSZ for guiding her through her Jewish education.

Lisa has an interest in writing and drama as well as the technical aspects of stage production, including make-up and wardrobe. She enjoys music and sings in a rock band at school, and made time to regularly volunteer at the Obama for President headquarters. After the election, she will be volunteering at The Jewish Home as well as helping at A Woman's Place, a homeless shelter for families.

Her mentor, Sarita Groisser has been a true inspiration and motivator. She and Lisa have developed a relationship that will go beyond her bat mitzvah training. The entire family thanks you, Sarita! Andrew Ramer, her drash mentor, has tapped into Lisa's deep thoughts and we are sure it will show in her Bat Mitzvah drash. Lisa's younger brother Parker, plays an ever changing role in her life. Keesha, the dog, protects her from a safe distance.

Congregation Sha'ar Zahav, as a community, has been an incredible force in Lisa's process, and we thank you.

It is natural to turn inward when defeat comes. We need time to digest the awful reality that others in California could not see that love should be acknowledged where it blossoms and that civil marriage is a basic civil right. But we have to be careful not to isolate ourselves. Our work is clear: we need to resist fear and vulnerability by dialogue with those across race and faith lines, those who misunderstand and, as a result, fear us.

In the voting booth, the sacred and the secular intersect. Historically, we Jews vote have voted not with our pocketbooks but with our compassion. As a whole, our group of "haves" votes traditionally for the "have-nots." In the voting booth, we remember what it was like to be slaves in the land of Egypt. Whether we learned it as adults or at our parent's feet or at our Passover seder or in our religious school classroom or our adult education courses, from the civil right movements of our childhood or the civil rights movements of our adulthood— we Jews have a stubborn streak to make this world better and not just ourselves richer, to feed the hungry and not just stuff ourselves with the fat of the land. And every time a Jew votes on election day for affordable healthcare, a new energy economy, for a responsible end to the wars, the spark glows again.

As we put our pain and disappointment into perspective, let us remember that when President Obama takes the oath of office in January, he will do so with a record of support for GLBT rights that eclipses that of any serious national candidate before him.

As Jews, we lift up our hope that a new day of freedom and dignity for all is coming. We won't stop mending the world until that day comes.

"Yes, we can argue and debate our positions passionately," said Obama, "but all of us must summon the strength and grace to bridge our differences and unite in common effort: young and old, rich and poor, Democrat and Republican, black, white, Hispanic, Asian, Native American, gay, straight, disabled and not disabled."

It is my intention that our Sha'ar Zahav community will continue to be united in that effort to bring justice to the world.

Personalized Life Coaching

You're Motivated. You're Aware. Now let's focus on getting you there!

Shirli Millmond, B.S.B.A., is Certified Life Coach for personal health and wellness who has years of life coaching experience backed by knowledge, skills and formal training in Olympic sport, athletic coaching, special education and business administration.

I believe, first and foremost, that YOU CAN accomplish what you set out to achieve!

Did your childhood upbringing emphasize how you couldn't do this or that? Had your parents and mentors only forecast your failure? Are you still hearing their negative words? I work with individuals who would like to start saying that they CAN! I help them to realize that love, family AND a career is no longer a forbidden goal.

Soon, you will be making decisions in life from a feeling of power—not because you haven't any choice in important personal matters. Remember that every difficulty that you encounter can create an opportunity to grow, learn and become stronger!

Each journey begins with but a single step. You are just a phone call away from taking it.

LGBTQQI

By Howard Steiermann

“WHY CAN’T service leaders wear blue jeans on the bimah (pulpit)?” I was asked recently. It’s a good question.

I’ve seen service leaders wear Purim costumes; I’ve appreciated a drash (sermon) given one Folsom Street weekend with the darshon decked out in leather, and yep, I’ve worn grandma’s brooches and once I wore nail polish on the bimah, each time tying the accessory into the sermon. But blue jeans on the bimah on a Friday night, nuh-uh.

I’m not railing against dungarees. I’m oh-so grateful to the Levi Strauss Company for creating and donating our beautiful Torah mantels (covers). So why no blue jeans on the bimah?

This rule is one of many that is part of our minhag (customs) around service leading. Minhag is fluid, changing over time. Those changes all go through the ritual committee (which meets the last Thursday of the month and welcomes all congregants to visit!). The goal of minhag is to create, on the one hand, a sense of order and sacred space, and on the other, to create a warm and welcoming space for people so they can congregate in community. It’s not always easy achieving that balance.

In the thirty-plus years Congregation Sha’ar Zahav has been holding services, many lessons have been learned about achieving that balance, some of which I’d like to share with you:

- It’s preferable if at least one service leader can hold a tune

- People typically enjoy hearing a personal story or some sharing from a service leader that makes the liturgy relevant.

- No more than two (2) new things (melody of a prayer or song we already know or new song, etc) per service

- We’re sensitive to the breadth of Jewish experience: neophyte to nearly rabbinic. The entire spectrum is welcome and celebrated: both in the pew, as well as on the bimah.

These (and others) are not arbitrary rules, but rather were generated to make our services as accessible and meaningful as possible. Additionally, I believe that they offer some life lessons.

For example, service leaders are expected to show up at least twenty to thirty minutes before a service to check that the sanctuary, and that we ourselves, as well as our co-leader, are ready to hold a spiritual space. I believe that’s true in life too. If we have a chance to breathe prior to engaging in a task, it will go better, and be more meaningful.

Another bimah lesson which makes for a good life lesson is the importance for us as service leaders to accept that something unexpected often happens. All of us, even professional clergy, are human, so we have to know that when a ‘mistake’ happens, it’s ok. Our handling the unexpected in a competent manner allows congregants to feel they’re in safe hands. Isn’t that the same outside of shul? By admitting when we take a misstep, we allow others to be more compassionate. (And perhaps these admissions allow us to be more compassionate with ourselves.)

Lastly, I remind newer service leaders that we don’t have to do the whole service ourselves. Our co-leader is there to share the burden, and there are numerous other resources to call on for singing, leyning, writing and delivering a drash, etc. Which is another important life lesson: there are people around us willing and able to help, if we’ll only ask.

As for blue jeans...the lesson may be, “the clothes make the person” or “dress the part to feel the part.” Perhaps it’s a method for all of us to remember that there’s a time and place for everything.

Being at a service can be a transformative experience for all of us, service leader and pew sitter alike. I encourage you to think which skills you can bring to our bimah; which life lessons you can help teach, or which you’d like to work on. Please contact me. I’d be thrilled to help explore your opportunities to serve on the bimah.

The Maariv Service: The Desire for Holy Community

By Nina Wouk for the Ritual Committee

These words that I command you today shall be in your heart, and you shall ... speak ... of them when you lie down and when you rise up.' So the Torah commands, and so Jews have done for millennia, reciting the Sh'ma morning and evening. It is a private prayer, one that does not require a minyan. Ancient people often recited it under the covers, at the exact time they went to bed. But the evening Sh'ma didn't stay in bed; rather Jews developed it into the Ma'ariv service. The Sh'ma is commanded by the Torah, but the Ma'ariv service was born of desire.

Ever since Mount Sinai, Jews have experienced holiness in community. The desire for holiness brought crowds to the Temple in Jerusalem while it stood, and all Jewish services are based on the liturgy that went with Second Temple sacrifices. The oldest liturgy consisted entirely of psalms. Later, the cohanim took to reciting the morning Sh'ma together after the first daily offering. They chanted the ten commandments and the traditional three biblical paragraphs of the Sh'ma before performing any additional sacrifices. Over time, more accreted: thanks for God's love before the Sh'ma, and after it an affirmation of belief, a prayer for the acceptance of sacrifices, and a prayer for peace. The last two constitute the earliest recorded version of the Amidah.

The daily sacrifices were always officially witnessed by representatives of the people, who came from different parts of the country in rotation while those who remained at home gathered to recite the same psalms and prayers that were being chanted in the Temple. Because offerings were made morning and afternoon, people gathered for public prayer twice daily.

The afternoon gathering took place while the sun was still in the sky, too early for the evening Sh'ma. To this day, the afternoon service includes no Sh'ma. It consists of an Amidah with penitential prayers, preceded by a psalm and bracketed by Kaddishes.

Since there was no evening sacrifice at the Temple, and since the Sh'ma can be recited privately at home, there was no need for a public evening service. But in communal prayer, shared intention and shared action can create a more intense experience of holiness. After the destruction of the Temple, Jews felt cut off from God. To reforge the connection, the rabbis of the academy at Yavneh created guides to prayer, including the outline of the morning service that we still use today. Rather than recite the Sh'ma quietly at home, Jews quickly adapted the service outline to evening prayers as well.

The evening and morning services both begin with the Ba'rchu, the call to public worship, and continue with brachot for the rising and setting of the sun, Yotzer Or and Ma'ariv Arovim. These were rabbinic creations, dating from after the destruction of the Temple. The next prayer, Ahavah Rabbah in the morning and Ahavat Olam in the evening, expresses thanks for our way of life. The Sh'ma, which includes the V'Ahavtah and up to two additional paragraphs, is followed by the Geulah, a statement of faith in both past and future redemptions.

As late as the ninth century, the evening service ended with the Haskiveinu, a prayer for protection during the night and renewed life in the morning. However later generations weren't satisfied to end there. All other public prayer centers around the Amidah, and people began spontaneously adding it to the Ma'ariv service. By the eleventh century, the Amidah had become a standard part of the evening service.

Unlike those of the morning and afternoon services, which correspond to the public sacrifices that once took place in the Temple, the Ma'ariv Amidah is never repeated aloud by the service leader. Lacking any public function, the Ma'ariv Amidah, like the service of which it is part, came into being solely as a service of the heart.

"Pride and Joy"

A Foster Care Program for LGBTQ Youth

Thousands of children and youth are in foster care in the Bay Area. A disproportionate number of them are lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender or queer identified.

They are often invisible or rejected by their birth and foster families. We need people—gay and straight, young and old, couples and singles—to open their hearts and homes. Family Builders is currently recruiting families for its Pride and Joy program, a foster care program for LGBTQ youth. Please contact Charles Lerner at 510-272-0204 to learn more about the program.
